Quarters P is a two-and-one-half-story frame house with formstone exterior and a hip roof located on the east side of Tome Road near the base chapel on the grounds of the former Bainbridge Naval Training Center near Port Deposit, Maryland.

The house faces southwest and has a three-bay irregular facade with a central entry. A one-story shed porch with Tuscan columns extends across the southeast and east elevations. The rear or north elevation has a projecting section at the northwest corner with a one-story shed addition. The formstone exterior has string courses at the first and second floor levels. The hip roof overhangs with its rafter ends exposed. The composition roof has shingled dormers with paired windows in each elevation. Interior brick chimneys are located on the east and west sides of the house. The fenestration is largely single pane plate glass with 12-light upper sashes in the main windows.
